Lewis Journal - July 21, 1805:

"...the country was rough mountains & such as that of yesterday until towards evening when the river entered a beautiful & extensive plain country of about 10 or 12 miles wide which extended upwards further than the eye could reach...this valley is bounded by two mountains which have their summits partially covered with snow."

July 22, 1805:

"The Indian woman recognizes the country & assures us that this is the river on which her relations live, and that the three forks are at no great distance; this piece of information has cheered the spirits of the party who now begin to console themselves with the anticipation of shortly seeing the head of the Missouri yet unknown to the civilized world."

July 23, 1805:

"...passed a remarkable bluff of a colomous coloured earth on Starboard Intervened with Streaks of black and bright red slate."

Sgt. Gibb Journal - July 24, 1805:

"The morning was fine, and we early prosecuted our voyage; passed a bank of very red earth, which our squire told us the natives use for paint."
